Prince Andrew mars wedding fairytale with links to paedophile, Muammar Gaddafi

MARCH 07, 2011 1:30PM

by: Sky News

BRITAIN will downgrade Prince Andrew's role as a trade ambassador over his association with a convicted paedophile amid accusations of his links with Libyan dictator Muammar Gaddafi.

Ministers will carry out a review into Andrew's position, which could result in the Queen's second son losing his role completely, government sources told London's Daily Telegraph.

The prince came under increased fire after it emerged that US businessman Jeffrey Epstein - who served 18 months in jail for child sex offences - had paid off debts accrued by the Duchess of York, Andrew's former wife.

Andrew has been a guest at Epstein's Florida mansion, where under-age girls were abused, but there has been no suggestion that the fourth-in-line to the British throne had ever been guilty of any wrongdoing.

Prince Andrew's trade role for Britain is set to be downgraded over a series of embarrassing connections.

Uncovered: The macabre sex chamber of Libya's Colonel Gaddafi where he raped girls - and boys - as young as 14

- Colonel Muammar Gaddafi kept several 'sex dungeons' at his palaces
- Libyan tyrant forced hundreds of young girls to become his sex slaves
- Gaddafi also had a 'harem' of young men called 'the services group'
- Dictator visited schools and 'chose' his victims with a pat on the head
- Gaddafi was killed in October 2011 after 42 years of dictatorship

IT has been more than two years since the capture and death of Muammar Gaddafi, the Libyan dictator whose reign subjected an impoverished people to four decades of murder and terror.

When the bedraggled former leader was hauled out of a drainpipe and shot in October 2011, his death ended the bloody Nato-led civil war that had ravaged the country since the start of that year.

The full horror of his brutality has been slow to emerge, with many Libyans still fearing retaliation by those who continue to be loyal to their late leader. But it can now be revealed that the most heartbreaking of Gaddafi's victims include hundreds, possibly thousands of teenage girls who, throughout his 42-year reign, were beaten, raped and forced to become his sex slaves.

Many were virgins kidnapped from schools and universities and kept prisoner for years in a specially designed secret sex lair hidden within Tripoli University or his many palaces. In the 26 months since he was deposed, Gaddafi's den - where he regularly raped girls as young as 14 - has remained locked. But today its gaudy interior, where the colonel brutalised his victims, can be seen for the first time in photographs from a hard-hitting BBC4 documentary.

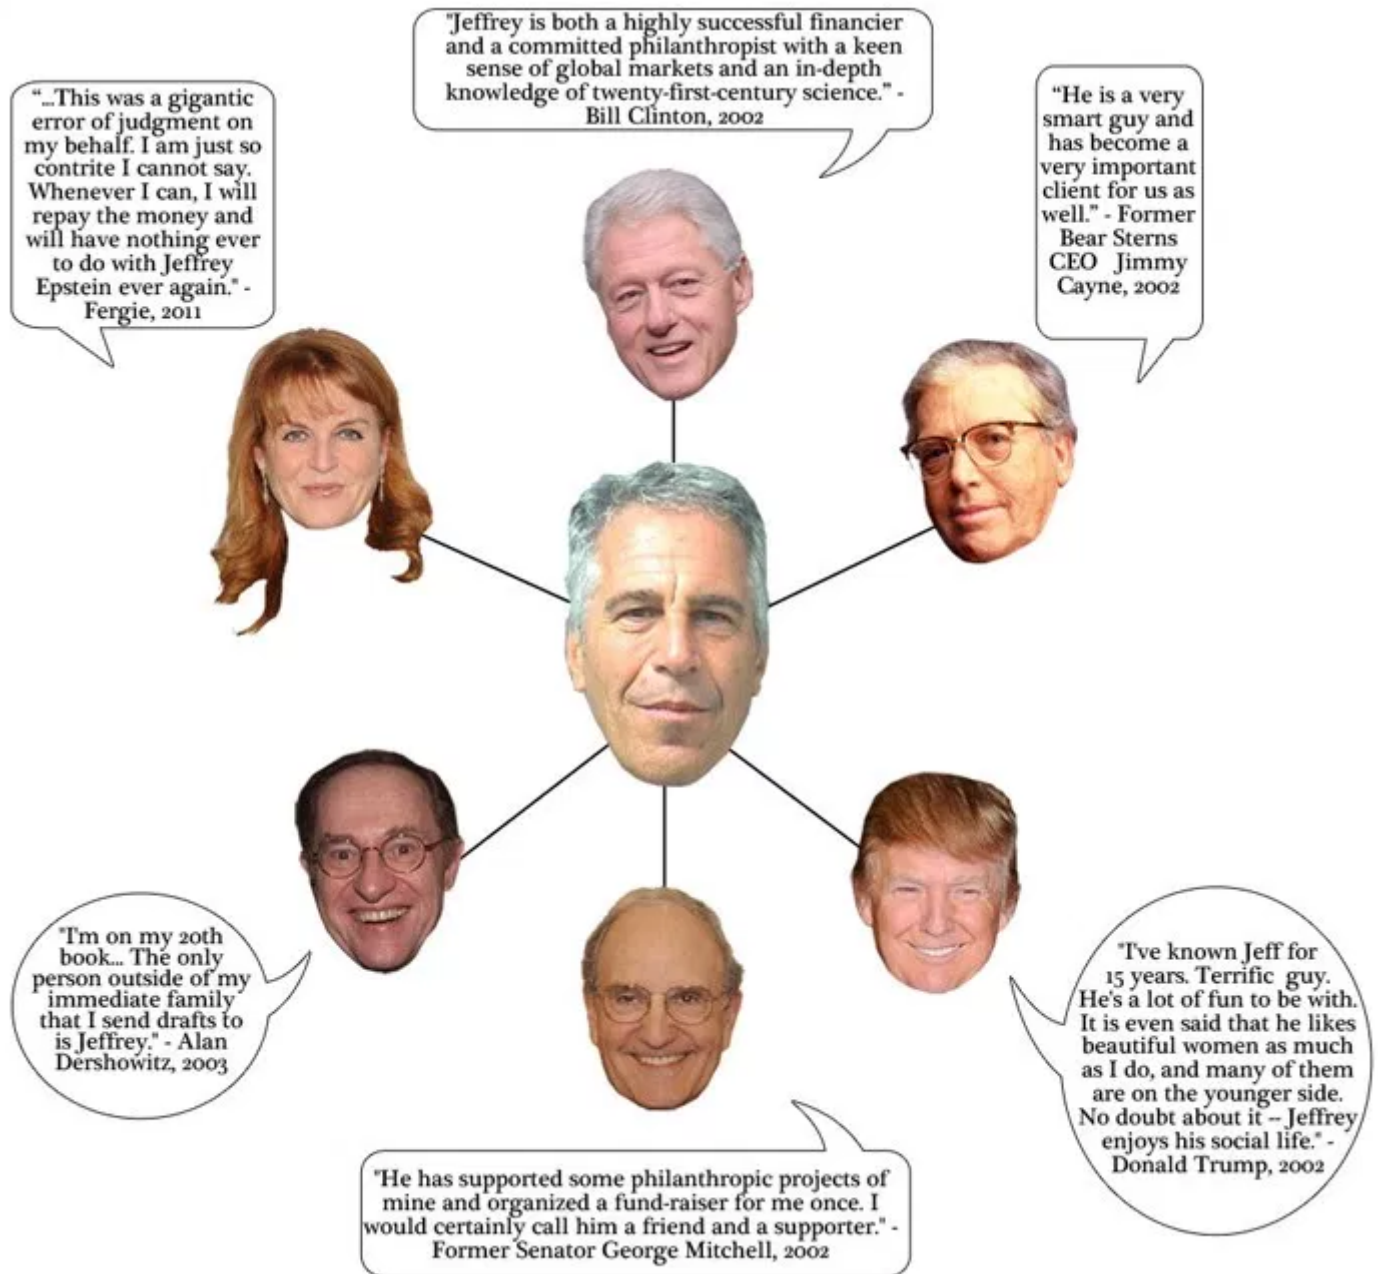

Inside the small, nondescript single-storey complex, the girls were forced to watch pornography to 'educate' them for their degrading treatment at the hands of Gaddafi. And even those who did manage to escape were often shunned by their deeply religious Muslim families who believed their family honour had been tainted.
